I made the flyer @ $15. It's still a great deal. Howard has approved. I'll let you know once it's live.

I say we could lose money or come up even given the snacks. I don't think we're going to need to buy \$200 worth of snacks when $5 \times 40 = 200$. For a weeknight, \$10 is a good price point.

From Beer on the Wall:

For 40 people, I'd probably recommend we do 2x cases of beer, which is 48x cans (usually 16oz). That way, we could do 8x cans apiece of 6x different beers and each of the 40 attendees - plus you and the host - could enjoy 4oz of each, for a total of 24oz (with a little extra of each to spare, in case it's needed).

Since we'll probably be focusing on beers without adjuncts (fruit, lactose, chocolate, marshmallow, etc.), most of them will be pretty affordable... Probably about $3.50 / can on the average, plus tax... The pilsners / lagers / wheats may be a little cheaper and the hoppy / Belgian beers, a little pricier... But $3.50 / can plus tax is probably a good average. So probably around $200 once the tax is figured in for the beers... Plus $200 for the tasting fee... So all-told, probably around $400. Is that enough info to get started on your budgeting?

Figure $400 for 40 people == $10 per person

We can cover the snacks, could lose $100 or so, but it would be a nice event, or we just charge $15, which is still a great deal.

Thoughts?
